

Uncle Iroh moves to Ba Sing Se to live out new life as a refugee, and finds himself working at a cafe.

He finds that while he loves ownership he thinks the tea is terrible and wants to contribute his recipes to the shop to show some improvement!

He is very experimental and tries new things, dragging his nephew around to help him. He dreams of becoming successful and serving tea to the king at the palace.

The King somehow finds out about him from his reputation, building him his own tea shop near the center of the city!

Even though he has some enemies for ditching the refugees, Iroh just wants to fulfill his royal tea wishes. He has no problem defending himself.

His business is successful and he wraps it up and gives the business to his nephew so he can retire.